World Championship Reunification Hits Snags !

Last year, the chess world saw the amazing creation of the Prague Unity Agreement, which was a process for arriving once again at a recognized single world chess champion. Optimism was high. There was to be a candidates tournament to determine who would challenge Vladimir Kramnik (Russia) for the classical world championship. Peter Leko (Hungary) became the challenger by winning the 2002 Dortmund Germany candidates tournament. There was general agreement that he was a most worthy challenger. The winner of that match was to play the winner of the match on the other side of the draw. That match saw Rulsan Ponomariov (Ukraine), 2002 FIDE World Champion, playing Garry Kasparov (Russia), highest rated player in the world, and 13th FIDE world champion. It was announced by FIDE that a contract had been reached to hold this match in Buenos Aires, Argentina, starting June 19. The final reunification match was targeted for November 2003. That month was also to see the start of the next FIDE knockout cycle. So all seemed in place and on track.

But tremors started to be felt. Einstein TV, which holds the rights to Kramnik's defence of his classical chess championship title, kept putting off announcing the location and sponsorship for the Kramnik- Leko match. Finally, late last month, Einstein issued a press release acknowledging that they had been unable to locate a sponsor who would cover the full amount of the projected prize fund of $1 million. All of a sudden, the whole process came to a lurching halt. Einstein still maintains that it will get a package together and hold the match before the end of 2003. But their track record doesn't instill a lot of confidence that they will pull this off.

So now the “ alternate scenarios “ are starting to be floated by one and all. This Week in Chess suggested a multi-round round robin with all four in it. Who knows what other trial balloons will be sent up. And though the FIDE President, Kirsan Ilyumzhinov, recently maintained that the Ponomariov- Kasparov match was going ahead as planned, there are rumours that as long as there are question marks hanging over the Kramnik- Leko match, FIDE may want to postpone its match until the situation clarifies, so they don’t end up holding a match, while the other side of the draw collapses. June 19 is not far away, and so FIDE will have to decide quickly if it is going to postpone its match as well. And needless to say, all this throws serious doubt on the holding of the title reunification match before the end of 2003.

It looks like we’re going to be following the rumors for the next little while !

2003 Povilas Vaitonis Memorial - Toronto – May 17 – 19

Report by David Cohen, T.O.

25 players gathered at the Bayview Games Club for a Victoria Day weekend of chess.

In Group 1, there was an exciting contest for first place, as Charlie Tang raced out in front by winning his first three games. He was then defeated by Christian Stevens, who knew that his only chance at first place lay in playing for the win with Black! But then in the last round, 13-year old Zhe Quan recovered from his first round loss to Charlie, and caught up to Christian by beating him in their last round match up. Thus, Charlie and Christian split the $150 prize, and each was awarded a 6 month membership by the tournament’s sponsor, Bayview Games Club.

In Group 2, there was no contest: Steve Demmery scored a perfect 5-0!!!! Here is an interesting game from this section :

In Group 3, an open Swiss put together at the last minute for those not playing in the Round Robins, an exciting competition developed for the two prizes: first overall, and under 1500. All of the top players in effect completed a round robin with each other, with Omid Nemati emerging the winner with 4/5. Needing a win with Black for a share of first, Richard Wing fell to Toronto Open co-champion Morgan Mills. Here is their game :

Sick Kids' Hospital Foundation Fundraiser – Toronto – May 19

Report by David Cohen, Benefit Organizer

Kevork Hacat, National Master and 1998 & 2000 Ontario High School Champion, donated his time to give a simultaneous chess exhibition on 9 boards at the Bayview Games Club, Toronto for the benefit of the Hospital for Sick Children Foundation. He scored +6 =1 -2. The only junior to defeat him, Daniel Abrahams, received a prize of a $25 gift certificate, donated by Chess Shop at 1685 Bayview Ave., Toronto. Christian Pierce was the other winner; Morgan Mills got the draw. The cost to play was $10; BGC reduced its usual daily membership fee from $5 to $3; so $7/player, for a total of $63, was raised for the Hospital. Thanks to Lawrence Day for helping to publicize the event in his Toronto Star chess column; and to those who played and had fun while helping out in a good cause.
